In Perilli's words: "[...] I am convinced that interculturalism, or the intercultural process, is none other than pluriculture. Pluriculture, in turn, is summed up in the coexistence among and by different cultures within a society. While Multiculturalism, as far as I'm concerned and as far as what I think it really is, is nothing more than a process. To that end, Multiculturalism, by analyzing the syncretistic derivation of the encounter between different cultures, Have I not been sufficiently clear?

I will try to explain myself better, saying that Multiculturalism is not only positive, but it is a means of survival. Hence it follows, evidently, that those cultural identities which are, in their innermost depths, in constant flux. These are themes that I have been reflecting upon for almost twenty years and more. I have always been interested in the process of interculturalism.

Perilli recalls: "[...] The idea evolved, naturally, through several designs that I was working on in Toronto. Remembering, today, what happened, it would seem that it was all linear and simple. In reality it was a long and difficult process. After many ups and downs, in fact, they actually came to the conclusion that they couldn't use it as a monument.

Which I did as soon as possible. The project, nevertheless, became lost in the ministerial cabinet. After some time, to my surprise, I received a phone call from a representative of the Italian Commission. It was that year in which the Congress of Italian Canadians decided to present Toronto with the monument. While the same Congress commissioned from me a medal, with my multiculturalist Symbol, to be awarded to the Vatican City - Francesco Perilli was received to illustrate the multicultural project by monseigneur Perilli recalls: “[...] I have already indicated how enthusiastic I was when, in 1985, I returned to Rome. The Undersecretary of that Council received me, Monseigneur Raffaele Farina, and I showed him the monument. ‘When did you conceive the monument?’, he asked me. ‘At the end of the Seventies, beginning of the Eighties’, I replied. ‘Prophetic. This is the philosophy of the Pope’, he said. To round off our talk, some time later he asked me to write a text for the front page and p. 5. “Maclean’s”, July. RAI, TG2 1985

- The monument “Symbol of Multiculturalism” is inaugurated. Perilli explains: “[...] Central to the entire compositional axis, the human figure symbolically represents the multiculturalist philosophy. Likewise, the eight meridians, held aloft by eight doves, also have a precise symbolic significance.”

- He meets Federico Zeri. Perilli recounts: “[...] I had of course read several books by Zeri. There was another problem. I didn’t know how to contact him, or where he lived. By accident, one day I said I was a painter, and in a somewhat different tone Zeri said: ‘Contemporary art does not interest me. Everyone was already out of the Theatre. A small crowd surrounded Zeri, who was waiting for him. ‘You are with the Professor?’, I asked. ‘Yes, why?’, he replied. ‘I would like to show him these paintings’. ‘Who are you? ... really interesting’, he said to me. Then, handing them back to me: ‘Call me in June’. ‘He’s not joking, is he?’, I asked his companion. ‘Zeri never jokes about these things; do as he tells you’. And today, for example, it is with gratitude that I recall how he intervened personally in support of the monument. I would say, from all evidence, that you have by now taken off toward national and, I predict, international recognition.”
